UTA passes free for BYU students, faculty

By Russell Page
russell@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

BYU students, faculty and staff can all ride Utah Transit Authority buses and the TRAX system free for one year beginning April 30 by showing their university identification cards.

"The decision was made that this was the right time to put the program in place on a trial basis," said Carri Jenkins, assistant to the president for University Communications. "We are looking at the benefit to faculty, students and staff as well as how many take advantage of this opportunity," she said.

BYU students, faculty and staff can use their university I.D. cards to ride all UTA routes excluding those that run to the ski resorts and the Flextrans system.

According to UTA spokesman Kris McBride, the one-year ecopass program will be funded by a federal grant administered by the Mountainland Association of Governments.

> "It encourages students who do have vehicles to take the bus. ... Our No. 1 pollutant in this area is auto emissions."
> — Val Peterson, UVSC associate vice president for college relations

The Congestion Mitigation and Air-Quality Improvement Program is a federal fund set up to support programs that help "reduce transportation-related emissions," according to the Federal Transportation Administration's Web site.

Utah Valley State College and the University of Utah also participate in the ecopass program.

"It encourages students who do have vehicles to take the bus," said Val Peterson, UVSC associate vice president for college relations. "Our No. 1 pollutant in this area is auto emissions."

Peterson said UVSC has not had any problems so far with the ecopass program they began last year.

He also said UVSC has agreed to continue the program with UTA for a second year, but UVSC will have pay for the costs.

Continued funding for the University of Utah's ecopasses have been diverted from the university.

"That is paid through parking fees at the University of Utah," McBride said. "BYU would be responsible for funding the program after the free trial period."

BYU and UTA have not discussed all the details of the ecopass program. However, UTA will be reimbursed for funds spent by the grant.

"UTA would be reimbursed through CMAQ funds," McBride said.

The ecopass program begins with BYU the first day of Spring Term.

Rob Foster, BYUSA student body president-elect, said it seems like an excellent opportunity for BYU students who live far off campus.

White supremacists recruiting in Utah

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — A white supremacist group is looking for allies in Utah, saying the state's largest religion has historically been sympathetic to its cause.

The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints reacted strongly to the statement from Illinois-based World Church of the Creator.

"To infer that Utah's Mormon population is sympathetic to racism is outrageous," Church of Jesus Christ spokesman Dale Bills said.

"The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints repudiates any efforts to deny a person his or her inalienable dignity and rights on the abhorrent and tragic theory of the superiority of one race over another."

The World Church campaign, launched Monday, involves door-to-door distribution of a 32-page newspaper to homes.

The publication blames the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on U.S. support for Israel. About twice a year, the group picks an area for its literature drop. It previously targeted communities in Florida, Ohio, Illinois and California.

The newest version of its publication condemns Jews, Latinos and blacks, saying, "the non-whites are destroying our country."

The World Church bills itself in the publication as nonviolent but notes it was dubbed "the most dangerous hate group in America" by the Anti-Defamation League because of its call for a racial holy war.

> "To infer that Utah's Mormon population is sympathetic to racism is outrageous."
> — Dale Bills, LDS church spokesman

The World Church promotes "the survival, expansion, and advancement of the white race," which they call the "highest pinnacle of Nature's creation."

Church leader Matt Hale offers a weekly update for followers, accessible through a telephone hotline, in which he calls his brothers and sisters to rally in winning a racial holy war.

"I am a white person who cares about white people," Hale said in a voice message.

The Church of Jesus Christ began allowing blacks into the priesthood in 1978.

A meeting held by the World Church last year in Salt Lake City attracted only two people, but Hale's denies that statement.

Cougars hope for 'Sweet' victory over Vols

By Rebekah Romney
rebekah@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Sports Writer

The BYU women's basketball team has found comfort in its underdog status and is excited to compete in the NCAA Sweet Sixteen.

"We've caught a lot of people off guard, but not us," senior guard Stacy Jensen said.

"We are playing to where we thought we could play."

The Cougars have tallied up dramatic wins over No. 6 Florida, 90-52, and No. 3 Iowa State, 75-69, Saturday and Monday, respectively, to advance this far.

They now face the Tennessee Volunteers, a team that benefited from BYU's upset of the Cyclones. Instead of facing Iowa State on its home court, the Lady Vols will face the No. 11 seed Cougars on the neutral court of the Hilton Coliseum in Ames, Iowa.

The second-seeded Tennessee Volunteers ended the season ranked sixth in the USA Today/ESPN Coaches poll, and are favored to win the game Saturday.

"I think Tennessee is inspired and motivated," Florida coach Carol Ross said. "Those factors weigh in as much as strategy and technique.

"I'd still bet on Tennessee, that they will find a way to get through that (BYU) offense."

Head coach Pat Summitt has built a strong program at Tennessee — it is one of only two teams to be a part of every NCAA tournament since the event began in 1982.

Last year was its earliest exit ever, with a Sweet Sixteen loss to Xavier.

This year the Lady Vols rolled over Georgia State 98-68, and last year's champion Notre Dame 89-50, to advance to the Sweet Sixteen.

Tennessee has many factors in its favor, rebounding being one of the most obvious.

The Lady Vols have an average of 8.6 more rebounds per game than their opponents.

This is attributed partly to the height of its athletes, five of whom stand over 6 feet 1 inch.

Senior center Michelle Snow is 6 feet 5 inches and will literally be a huge obstacle for junior forward Jennifer Leitner to guard.

"They're so athletic and know the game so well," Leitner said. "We think if we can screen and move, we can get open shots."

The most dangerous player for Tennessee may be junior guard Kara Lawson.

Lawson averages 16 points and five rebounds each game and earned first-team honors in the SEC.

BYU is improving in every game, now shooting 45.2 percent from the field and 40.9 percent from the arc.

"We're peaking at the right time," junior guard Erin Thorn said.

Thorn, MVP of the Mountain West Conference, is averaging 17.6 points per game.

If the Cougars can pull off another upset Saturday, they will advance to the Elite Eight and play the winner of the Vanderbilt-University of North Carolina game.

The BYU-Tennessee game tips off at 5 p.m. and will be broadcast live on ESPN.

Pope speaks out against sex scandals

VATICAN CITY — Breaking his silence, Pope John Paul II denounced the "grave scandal" of priests implicated in sex-abuse cases rocking the Roman Catholic Church, saying they had betrayed their vows and succumbed to evil.

In an annual pre-Easter message to priests released Thursday by the Vatican, the pope used some of his strongest language to address an issue that has seriously embarrassed the church in the United States and elsewhere.

"As priests, we are personally and profoundly afflicted by the sins of some of our brothers who have betrayed the grace of ordination," the pope said.

He said they had succumbed "to the most grievous forms" of what he called, using the Latin phrase, the "mystery of evil."

Palestinian bomber kills self, two others

JERUSALEM — A Palestinian suicide bomber blew himself up in a main downtown Jerusalem shopping area Thursday in an anti-Israeli attack that killed two bystanders. At least 60 were wounded, police said.

In response to the blast, Israel canceled a round of U.S.-brokered cease-fire talks with the Palestinians planned for later Thursday.

The explosion went off at the foot of the city's tallest office tower, on King George Street near the site of several other recent shooting and bombing attacks.

The Al Aqsa Brigades, a militia linked to Yasser Arafat's Fatah faction, claimed responsibility. The Bush administration said later Thursday it is taking steps to designate the militia as a foreign terrorist organization.

White House: Protect sensitive info

WASHINGTON — The White House has ordered government agencies to remove from Web sites and public documents any sensitive information, such as locations of nuclear materials, that might help terrorists.

White House Chief of Staff Andrew Card sent a memo to the heads of all agencies and executive departments Wednesday directing them to immediately safeguard any government records that could help terrorists.

Card also ordered them to take a look at all public documents and report back to the Office of Homeland Security within 90 days.

"This is very serious business," White House spokesman Ari Fleischer said. "People inadvertently had information pre-Sept. 11 that should be viewed in a different context in the post-Sept. 11 era."

Officials seek home for Oly cauldron

SALT LAKE CITY — The angular glass-and-steel cauldron that held the Olympic flame needs a permanent home.

It now stands at the south end of Rice-Eccles Stadium, where the Olympic Opening and Closing Ceremonies were held. But long-term plans for the stadium mean it will have to be moved.

Exactly where it will go remains to be decided, but the University of Utah and the Salt Lake Organizing Committee agree that decision will be made soon.

"We were told to get on with this by President (Bernie) Machen," said Randy Turpin, the university's vice president for administrative services. "I figure there will be more clarity in a couple of weeks about where we're going and how."

SLOC Chief Operating Officer Fraser Bullock estimated it might take a month to work out details. But he is confident ongoing conversations will make sure the $2 million, 90-foot structure will be taken care of.

Scripture of the Day

"For behold, thus saith the Lord God: I will give unto the children of men line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little; and blessed are those who hearken unto my precepts, and lend an ear unto my counsel, for they shall learn wisdom; for unto him that receiveth I will give more; and from them that shall say, we have enough, from them shall be taken away even that which they have. Cursed is he that putteth his trust in man, or maketh flesh his arm, or shall hearken unto the precepts of men, save their precepts shall be given by the power of the Holy Ghost."

Springville at odds over devil ma

By Callie Buys and Spencer Parkinson
buys@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writers

Just how many people in Springville want to get rid of the high school's Red Devil mascot is what the Nebo Board of Education hopes to find out.

At a special meeting Thursday, the board decided to conduct a survey to gauge Springville's feelings about dropping the controversial mascot.

But school officials have made it clear that public opinion won't determine this devilish issue.

"Ultimately, the decision needs to be that of the school board and should not, by law, be delegated to the vote of the people," said Carl Nielson, Nebo superintendent.

"The board of education should consider the survey and other facts relating to the issues, and then make a decision," he said.

The survey will be conducted May 7, and the board will make a decision at a regularly scheduled board meeting the next day.

However, this is hardly a new issue for Springville.

The appropriateness of the Red Devil mascot has been debated every few years, but discussions have become increasingly heated this year.

"This issue has dragged on for months," said Craig Allred, a supporter of the Red Devil mascot. "We want to set a precedent so that when the issue comes up again, it can be resolved in two weeks and not drag over months."

Given the issue's divisiveness, local school officials turned the mascot fight over to the Nebo Board of Education, Nielson said.

Students, faculty and staff from Springville High, as well as registered voters in Springville and Mapleton, will be eligible to participate in the survey, which will be conducted in the Springville High School, Mapleton Elementary School and the Nebo Learning Center.

"Our biggest concern as a board is the education of our students, and that's been sorely disrupted by this issue," said board member Bonnie Palmer.

"I would like to see everyone — parents, faculty, staff, administration and the students — make this a learning experience and not a derogatory experience for these kids," she said.

Postcards informing the public of the survey will be mailed to all postal patrons in Springville and Mapleton, said board member J. Collin Allan.

The board decided to survey in May so residents could register to vote and wait the necessary 30-day period before Palmer said.

Colonial reading books show change in society

By Brittany Brown
brown@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

Books used to teach American children to read, from the colonial times to present, will be on exhibit today in the social sciences section of the Harold B. Lee Library.

"They are wonderful books that give us a great insight on how children were taught and what they learned about all the way from early colonial times until now," said Roni Jo Draper, an assistant professor of adolescent literature.

The books are part of an exhibit that will be on display until April 10.

Draper is scheduled to lecture Thursday on "From McGuffey to Dick and Jane: A History of the American Reader." She will discuss the development of American reading instruction through an examination of the books used to introduce American children to reading.

The books range from the Horn books of the 1700s to books from the present. They represent some of the books the library keeps in Special Collections.

"These are really old, rare books that were first printed to be used in schools and were not intended to last forever," Draper said.

For such inexpensive printing, it's remarkable the old books have lasted this long, Draper said.

Seeing the differences in the books will help people see how society has changed and progressed, and what the aims and objectives of education are, Draper said.

Through the years, the curriculum has changed.

"In colonial times, education was used to help children gain salvation and was based on the Puritan Christian ideals," Draper said.

When America sought independence, it became important for children to read so they could understand what it means to be a citizen and a patriot, she said.

Draper said she hopes the exhibit will not only offer new insights, but also highlight the collections at the library.

Warm weather prompts shorter hair cuts

By Andrea Johnston and Elizabeth Gilbert
gilbert@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

These are a few of the most common new spring haircut styles according to salonweb.com.

As spring fever hits, it means days at the pool, warmer weather, walking in flip-flops —and short hair.

West Hollywood hairstylist, David Ahlander said every spring people flock to salons looking for a shorter haircut.

"For some reason, when the warm weather hits, people decide it's time to go shorter," Ahlander said.

BYU student Ashley Dickson, who has always had long hair, said she is contemplating chopping a few inches off.

"Whenever spring comes, I have this impulse to run out and cut my hair," said Dickson, 20, a junior from San Clemente, Calif., majoring in community health.

Dickson isn't sure if she will actually go through with the cut — it depends on how hot it gets.

This season, those like Dickson seeking a shorter hairdo are in luck.

Ahlander said there are plenty of in styles that are perfect for warmer weather.

Nicole Holland, a stylist with Aspen Salon in Pleasant Grove agrees.

"Super short is definitely back in."

Holland said short hair is not limited to a few styles.

The classic bob is always in, but this season it has more texture, she said.

One of the big styles this season is a tasseled pixie, which is short and messy, she said.

"Texture is big right now with any hairstyle, whether short or long," Holland said.

If clients want to do curls, well-defined, piecey curls are the best, Holland said.

Ahlander agreed soft fringe edges are a nice touch to any haircut.

Another way to bring dimension to a short haircut is by adding highlights.

"Highlighting is great, but not as thick and heavy as it used to be," Ahlander said. "Highlights are going finer and more sophisticated."

Holland suggests trying "sunkissed" streaks, which give hair soft, caramel-colored tones.

"Avoid the pink and purple tones of last season, unless you want to look like you're a rockstar from the past," Ahlander said.

He said short hair is not just for women.

Many men also come into Ahlander's salon also looking for change in a shorter spring haircut.

"Even though long, shaggy hairstyles were in during the winter, it's okay for guys to go short too," Ahlander said.

Sunshine entices students to get up and exercise

People exercising at a gym spin class. Spring gets some students off the couch and outdoors to enjoy the good weather full of useful activities.

Spring is in the air, the weather is warming up and students are strapping on their tennis shoes and building up a sweat.

The warmer weather is pulling some students off their couches and out of the gyms to exercise outside.

Brian Gilbertson, fitness counselor at 24 Hour Fitness in Provo, said there is a slight decrease in the number of people who come in this time of year.

People exercise outdoors more often because of the higher temperatures, he said.

"People feel that they can run outside more because the climate is less harsh on the body," Gilbertson said.

Alan Parcell, assistant professor in the Department of Physical Education, said people do tend to work out more when it warms up. He suggests students choose an activity that has health benefits but is recreational as well.

"My recommendation is to pick something they enjoy rather than what they see everyone else doing," Parcell said.

Making your workout a social activity can also be beneficial, he said. Parcell said support from other people can be a motivating force in an exercise program.

Larry Tucker, professor in the Department of Physical Education, recommends a few ways to start a new workout program.

"The most important thing to remember is to start slow and easy, because it's easy to overdo at the start," Tucker said. "If you're going to be exercising for the next 30 years, there's no reason to try to do it all in three days."

The activity you choose is also a factor in sticking with it.

There are an infinite number of activities students can do: bicycling, aerobics, racquetball, tennis or basketball, Tucker said.

"It's important that you enjoy the activity so that you'll keep doing it," he said.

Walking is a good way to get started on any exercise program.

Begin with a 15 to 20 minute workout, and build up to 30 to 45 minutes per day. Then work from walking to jogging if possible, Tucker said.

Whatever activity chosen, try to plan for an aerobic workout four to five times a week, supplemented by strength training two to three times a week, Tucker said.

Gilbertson said strength training is also important to maintain overall muscle tone.

"Running is not the entire answer to staying in shape, resistance training is very important," Gilbertson said.

Tucker said there are courses available on campus, such as HEPE and Y Be Fit that are helpful in educating students about the healthy ways to exercise.

Students help efforts in Africa with local concert

A local concert is allowing students to help in a national humanitarian effort without leaving Utah.

A benefit concert featuring Ryan Shupe and Jon Schmidt at Kingsbury Hall at the University of Utah will raise money today for the Humanitarian Aid Relief Team efforts in Africa.

The orginization will use the proceeds from the event to buy medical supplies that will be used to treat patients in Africa with the disease Buruli ulcer said, Parker Fillmore the orginization chapter president for Utah Valley.

"There is no overhead because we are student run and all volunteers, so 100 percent of the proceeds from this concert will go to buying medical supplies for our mission," Fillmore said.

The organization is the only non-government organization in the United States that focuses on Buruli ulcer, said Fillmore. People aren't aware of the growing disease because it is in Africa and other major diseases like AIDS are more publicized, Fillmore said.

"Buruli ulcer is kind of an orphanage disease, no one really cares about it because we have AIDS and everyone focuses on AIDS, but meanwhile this problem is just getting bigger and bigger," Fillmore said.

This concert is a simple way students can help with a great cause while enjoying great music, said Camilla Millar, a BYU graduate student who is a member of HART.

Millar said BYU students should be concerned about humanitarian efforts in Africa because of their beliefs.

"We believe that all men and women are sons and daughters of God, so we should be actively involved in supporting programs that help better the quality of life for people," Millar said.

This summer 24 BYU students, who are members of the orginization will travel to Ghana at their own expense to help the on-going efforts to fight Buruli ulcer, said Millar. Some student volunteers try to find sponsors to pay for their trip to Africa, but most end up paying their own way, Millar said.

"Round-trip plane tickets cost $1,400, so most students have been working and saving very hard to be able to make this trip," Millar said.

Some students will spend their time in Africa finding cases for the medical teams to operate on, while others will educate the people about Buruli ulcer, general health and hygiene, Millar said.

The orginization provides students an opportunity not only to get an understanding of a worldwide health issue, but also to get involved first hand and learn leadership skills, Fillmore said.

"Not only are we helping those whom we serve, but we are also helping ourselves by taking advantage of this incredible opportunity," Fillmore said.

Humanitarian Aid Relief Team was founded by a few BYU students 10 years ago, and it has grown mostly internally to include more than 80 student volunteers from both BYU and the University of Utah, said Fillmore.

"A lot of the growth has been word of mouth, people who know about us tell their friends and they tell their friends and they get involved," Fillmore said.

Since 1995 more than $2 million in donated supplies have been delivered to Africa and hundreds of patients have been treated for Buruli ulcer, the organization's Web site said. Fillmore said although the number may not seem impressive, the difference it has made is immeasurable.

"Not only have we treated people, we have also trained doctors who have gone on to treat people," Fillmore said.

According to the Web site Buruli ulcer is a disease similar to leprosy and tuberculosis, which begins as a painless lump on the skin, which if left untreated can develop into massive open sores on the body. The exact cause of Buruli ulcer is still unknown, so there is no prevention. But if the ulcer is detected early, it can be treated through surgery, according to the Web site.

Buruli ulcer was recently classified as an emerging infectious disease by the World Health Organizations, which basically means it is not just a problem, but a growing problem, Millar said.

The concert begins at 7:30 tonight at Kingsbury Hall. Tickets can be purchased online at ArtTix or by phone at 355-arts, or at the door for $10 for students and $12 for adults.

My Favorite Recipe

Fresh Salsa

8-10 Tomatoes (about 4 lbs)
1 Onion
4-5 mild Chilies
3-4 hot Chilies
4, 12oz. cans Tomato paste
4 Tbsp Salt
8 Garlic cloves

Chop up tomatoes, onions, chilies and garlic (or use a food processor). Combine all ingredients and simmer 1 hour in a large sauce pan or to desired thickness.
Chill.

oach Vance Law also said lousser pitched well, but d the defense as part of of BYU's problems.

idn't give Mousser any e support," he said. ve take care of the base- le better, we'll do better."

ougars faced Mountain nference pitcher of the ris Dunwell who pitched gs, allowing 11 hits and U's eight runs.

first scoring opportunity hen junior right fielder son hit a triple. But to the ntment of the 1,176 fans, s threw Carson out on an first base.

n out to change the call, but the umpire would not reverse his decision.

"It would have been nice to gain that momentum off the triple," Law said.

The first Cougar run came in the third inning when sophomore shortstop Ranger Wiens had a base hit.

The Aztecs scored five more runs in the fourth inning, retiring Mousser from the mound and sending junior Jason Garcia in to pitch.

In the middle of the fifth, there was a power outage, shutting down all of the lights, and halting play for 20 minutes.

When play resumed, the Cougars scored three more runs in the sixth, and two in both the eighth and ninth.

Carson, who went 0-5 for the night, said he was disappointed with the team's loss.

The Cougars play their second home gam at 7 tonight.

BYU to face top ranked Utes

Coming off last week's record setting meet, the No. 15 BYU gymnastics team looks to post top scores again at 7 p.m Saturday. against Utah in the Huntsman Center.

Traditionally, the two teams compete well against each other. Saturday's meet promises to be another high-scoring affair.

"It's the kind of meet everyone looks forward to," head coach Brad Cattermole said. "It's a great atmosphere and a fun place to compete."

The Cougars are ranked No. 5 in the North Central Region behind Utah, Iowa State, Minnesota and Denver. All are ranked nationally in the top 15.

The Cougars need to score well in this last regular season meet to enhance their regional qualifying score.

"We try not to really focus on the score," junior Lindsay Lines said. "We just focus on hitting our routines and the scores will come."

In their last meeting, Utah showed why it is one of the top teams in the nation by beating BYU 197.250-195.525. Utah performed with machine-like precision, while the Cougars were plagued by falls on beam and bars.

But the Cougars bounced back with their best performance of the season last week and are poised to challenge the Utes on their home turf.

"We finally showed the level we are at, and it gives us a lot of confidence going into the Utah meet," junior Candace Cosgrave said.

BYU will have to maintain the focus it showed against SUU if it hopes to upset Utah.

President Eric B. Shumway

President of Brigham Young University—Hawaii

Eric Brandon Shumway grew up in St. John's, Arizona. His parents are James Carroll and Merle Kartchner Shumway.

Eric Shumway attended St. John's High School, where he served as student body president, lettered in four sports, played baritone horn in the band as well as cello in the orchestra, sang in the choir, and won all-state honors in basketball and football. He attended Brigham Young University on a basketball scholarship, served a mission to Tonga, married Carolyn Merrill in June 1963, and graduated with a BA and MA in English literature and language from Brigham Young University.

Eric Shumway taught English at the Church College of Hawaii, trained U.S. Peace Corps volunteers in the Tongan language, and completed a PhD in English literature at the University of Virginia. He served as academic vice president at BYU—Hawaii, as acting president of the Polynesian Cultural Center, and became president of Brigham Young University—Hawaii in 1994.

President Shumway's Church and community service have included being bishop of the Hauula 2nd Ward, the first president of the BYU—Hawaii Stake, president of the Tonga Nuku'alofa Mission, and president of the Laie Community Association.

His professional contributions have concentrated largely in books, articles, and video documentaries on Tongan language and culture. He and Carolyn have seven children and sixteen grandchildren.

Group hopes to take smoke off screen

By Lindsay M Dickson
dickson@newsroom.byu.edu
NewsNet Staff Writer

graphic by Denise Plant

Advocates of Smoke Free Movies, an anti-tobacco campaign, hope to take the glamorization of smoking out of movies.

Next time one of Hollywood's favorites lights up a cigarette on the big screen, it may be enough to earn an "R" rating.

That's the hope, anyway, of Smoke Free Movies, an advocacy group that accuses the movie industry of advertising — and sensationalizing — tobacco use.

"It's a tremendously potent device — especially when children are exposed to it," said Stan Glanz, head of Smoke Free Movies and a professor at the University of California at San Francisco.

"We have strong evidence that children who see lots of smoking in movies are two-and-a-half times more likely to smoke than kids who see movies with little smoking," Glanz said.

James Sargent, a professor at Dartmouth Medical School, says he has the scientific basis for movement: The average child has seen more than 12,000 instances of tobacco use.

"Children develop attitudes towards smoking based on what they see," Sargent said.

Hollywood's depiction of smokers is glamorized and inaccurately presented around scenes of sexuality and masculinity, he said.

Sargent's study was conducted using a sample of children — in grades five through eight — from rural areas. The researchers assessed how often they had seen smoking in comparison to their attitudes about lighting up.

Nearly 85 percent of the top 25 highest-grossing movies released from 1988 to 1997 had scenes of tobacco use, according to a study by the Dartmouth Medical School.

Despite the increase in smoking on the big screen, Mark Smith, spokesman for Brown and Williamson Tobacco Co., said tobacco companies strongly discourage the use of their product in films.

"We don't want kids to smoke," Smith said. "All of our marketing is targeted to an adult audience."

Beverly May, regional advocacy representative for the National Center for Tobacco-Free Kids, said her group supports the Smoke Free Movies campaign.

"We know children and young adults look up to movie stars and we don't want those people to be smoking," she said. "They can do what they want in their personal life, but in a movie they have more responsibility to their fans."

Glanz said the Smoke Free Movies campaign is primarily aimed at putting pressure on Hollywood to confront what they are doing and take responsibility.

"We are up against two very powerful groups — Hollywood and the tobacco industry," she said. "It'll take time, but I'm quite confident we will prevail."
